It's a hoot

Knox Outdoor Products has introduced a brand new ETV (extreme terrain vehicle)—the Hoot—that we had a chance to ride and put through the paces.

The vehicle travels on land, mud, water and, in our case, ice.

It will fit in the back of your pickup like any other ATV, but its patented drive system eliminates the need for a traditional transmission. The skid steering incorporates technology in which handlebars—not a standard lever—apply the braking pressure.

The skid steer mechanism creates a near-zero turn radius, resulting in unparalleled maneuverability in and around trees. The same system makes it easy to make belt changes and repairs.

The Hoot works great on flooded property, climbs steep banks easily due to its low center of gravity and 6-wheel drive. It goes over fallen timber with ease.
